Expert network and

Stakeholders in higher education quality assurance

Stakeholder engagement has become a norm in higher education governance in EHEA, particularly in the area of quality assurance. Diverse expectations and experiences of various stakeholder groups are expected to contribute to a more effective and comprehensive quality assurance system.

Stakeholders are invited to advise on national policies and supranational initiatives, they are expected to serve in university boards and other advisory bodies, and their input is recommended for curriculum development and quality evaluation. Stakeholders should be involved in defining the vision and values of education to support student learning and develop a shared understanding of quality education. They should also be involved in the design and implementation of educational reforms and processes.

In the frame of EDUQAS project created network between EU and partner countries Ukraine and Kazakhstan universities, QA agencies from Ukraine - NAQA, Kazakhstan - IAAR, France - HCERES, associated partners: business and professional associations, national/local authorities. They participate in discussion of QA policies and regulations, in the development, evaluation and improvement of educational programmes, internship, professional case studies provision.

To increase sustainability of EDUQAS project results and to enable continuous dialogue between the project participants on quality assurance in higher education a pool of experts in both specific educational areas and the quality of higher education has been established.

Involving stakeholders in quality assurance processes as such, as well as in educational processes more broadly, is essential for building a culture of quality improvement.
